Dear Mr. Broderson,

8/4/97

It was some time ago that you offered to retype manuscripts for me and I sent you one on what Walt Brown had written. It also has been some time since you told me you had almost finished it. Yet since then I have heard nothing from you and gotten nothing of this.

In this time I've been hospitalized twice for a long series of illness many of which are not ^{very} commonly fatal. I've been lucky to survive them. But I'm now 84, feeble, and I want to have all my manuscripts at one point, whether or not retyped.

I also now have a local person to do this retyping.

I therefore ask that you please now return all of this, including the disk, for which I will pay you, as soon as you conveniently can.

Please indicate on the disk the program used in your computer.

Thanks, sincerely,

Harold Weisberg
